For Professor Luka Gabreski, scholar and son of a Polish „migracja”, the process of Lustration is more of an academic exercise than a personal quest. For Doctor Kasia Lubeka and others who live in the legacy of communist Poland, it is deeply personal.

The operatives of the secret police and their informants have much to answer for; their influence never really went away. People are still at risk in this new Cold War.

The threat is not only with those who fight to bring truth to light, but those for whom the nightmare of interrogation, surveillance and torture, never ended.

In Poland for a conference, Luka soon realises that the dangers of shining a spotlight on the past are all too real, and as deadly as ever.
